Dear Sir:

HUMAN RIGHTS

Millions of Americans are shocked to see the recent scandalous trials and sentencing of Anatoly Shcharansky and other human rights activists in the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, the fact that the Lithuanians, Latvians, Estonians, East Germans, Poles, Hungarians, Czechs and other Eastern European peoples are deprived of their rights of independence, self-determination, other human rights and religious freedom is overlooked and ignored.

Aleksandr I. Solzhenitsyn and Andrei D. Sakharov have repeatedly asked the Russian Communist leaders to dissolve the Soviet Union of the non-Russian republics and to do away with the Russian control of Eastern Europe in general.

The governments of the United States and other democracies of the West should condemn the Russian domination of Eastern Europe by all means.

Sincerely yours,
Dr. Alexander V. Berkis

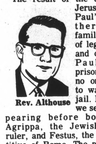
DIVINE MADNESS

Lesson for August 13, 1978

Background Scripture: Acts 26
Devotional Reading: 2 Timothy 2:6-13.



Rev. Althouse

Festus, the Roman governor, called it "madness." Paul the Apostle for Jesus Christ called it "the sober truth." You must decide for yourselves which man was correct.

The result of the uproar in Jerusalem and Paul's arrest there is a familiar series of legal delays and confusion. Paul is a prisoner whom no one seems to want in his jail. In Acts 26 we see him appearing before both King Agrippa, the Jewish puppet ruler, and Festus, the representitive of Rome. The purpose of the hearing is probably to decide whose prisoner he is going to be.

Not Disobedient

Paul is glad to appear before Agrippa because, although the king was hardly a good, lawkeeping Jew, he had considerable knowledge of Judaism and Jewish background. Thus, reasoned Paul, he would be more likely to understand his gospel than the Romans who didn't understand the Jewish faith and the Messianic hope.

Simply, but comprehensively, Paul tells his story, particularly speaking about the great vision he experienced on the road to Damascus. He is quite specific about this experience because it changed the whole course of his life. Surely, Agrippa could understand the importance of visions if Festus, the Roman, didn't!

Furthermore, Paul states that the vision dominated his life from that moment onwards. "Wherefore, O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision..." (26:20). That statement might very well be the epitaph for his life and ministry: He was not disobedient to the vision! It is what drove him through riots, shipwreck, imprisonment, stoning, beating, etc. His whole life from that point onward was governed by his vision of the Christ on the Damascus Road.

Such As I Am

If Festus — and perhaps Agrippa — found that hard to understand, they were even more astounded when Paul finished by saying he wished that the king and the governor "would become such as I am — except for these chains." Was the man crazy to suggest that these two men of wealth, power and culture would be better off if they were to become like him? Did this crazy man think that with a few words he could convert them to his Christ? No wonder Festus exclaimed: "Paul you are mad; your great learning is turning you mad."

In calling Paul "mad," Festus was really saying: Because I don't understand you you must be crazy, not me. It is still very much the same today, isn't it? We assume that it we don't understand, it must be the other guy who is mixed-up.

Yes, Paul's words did seem quite absurd, it not mad, but today we realize that it is only because of Paul that we even know of Agrippa and Festus. His vision and his obedience to it have stood the test of time. His divine madness has proven to be the world's only sanity.

The Pastor Speaks

As Thou Has Sent Me Into The World, Even So Have I Sent Them Into The World.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND MISSIONARIES, THEIR IDEALS.

It is our privilege to enter at once, by the open door of this utterance, into the interior of our Lord's ideas.

He speaks of missions and missionaries, speaking to His Father, He says, "Thou didst send me into the world." This was a Divine mission, with reference to a most necessitous field of missionary operation.

He says, "Thou didst send Me into the world." Other missionaries were and are required to carry on the great transformation movement, this transformation comes when the lost learns of the Love of God. This is the reason that Christ came into the world and the very same reason that He now sends us into the world to spread God's Love.

They were required to repeat and bring out the labor of love that Christ told them about and they were required to bring out His afflictions for the Gospel's sake. Hence the institution of a new mission by the ideal missionary, a mission modelled after that of His Father, Thou didst send Me into the world, even so send I them into the world.

The work that was required to be done would not be finished when their labours were over, the generation to which they belonged, having replaced a generation that went on before them. Their generation would soon pass on and another would take their place, this is the way that it has been and will be until His coming again. "But not for these alone do I ask, but for them also who shall believe on Me through their teaching." His mind was looking forward to the living results of the labours of the apostles, and, in these living results, to the first of many successive relays of missionary workers. He prayed, giving earnest expression to an agony of desire, that nothing might impede the progressive work that He had brought into this world.

"I ask, that they all may be one." Our Lord saw from afar the danger of revalry and dissension among His disciples. He saw that such dessension would involve disunion in missionary operations at home and abroad, so this disunion meant reduced efficiency meant to reduction of the numbers of those who would believe in His mission, and come under the purifying influence of His own and His Father's Love. He wanted to make sure that they got started right.

What does it mean for you to think about missions here and abroad? What good does it do? Well it is nothing less than to bring God's Holy Spirit into within the reach of His human creatures. Christ's mission began in the bosom of God, in view of an infinite calamity which as fallen on man. The race was hastening to a wrecked immortality. There was but one power that could arrest its fatal progress - - - Love. God was Love, God is Love. Christ came to establish the empire of love, and to change the moral drift of the perishing race. Large quotes caught this sublime thought. If God so loved us, we ought to love one another. The scope of the Divine mission was universal and hence, "All the world", became the watch word of the Christian ages. Hence, when Christ gathered a little band of followers, He pushed them out into the great world of want and woe and hate, along the line of His own career. "As Thou sent Me, so have I sent them." IN THEIR METHODS:

He ignored "superior races", and civilizations and pushes His truth out to the weakest and lowest, with a sublime dedication. He goes after the most needy, and he is looking ahead many years before He will be able to see much in results. He ignored the principle of demand and supply as utterly defective for the lifting of humanity. Their principle aims was to merely meet existing desires. Christ ignored desires and acted in view of needs. His method was to come when there was no demand for Him, but where there was an immeasurable need, and for love's sake, man's sake, God's sake, to thrust Himself upon the attention of men, when they wanted something else; thus creating a demand for spiritual life where none existed. Our mission is to proceed on the same principle. The apostles so acted. They went where there was no demand for them. The Macedonian Cry, which came to Paul was not the cry of the men of Macedonia, but the cry of the Spirit of God for Macedonia.

These three pinciples should characterize our Christian methods.

1. He ignored "Superior races"

2. He recognized the essential slowness of the cause.

3. He ignored the principle of demand and supply.

The most impressive aspect of Christ's mission is that He had no thought of Himself, we could say total abondonment of Himself to the cause of the lost. This must be true of the Christian disciple. The man who really enters upon the Christian mission, every land is his fatherland, because man is more than the world on which he works, and his final home is above.

We, as Christians, are not to carry to a sin-sick world a doubtful remedy, we must go to lost man as messengers of hope.

The Christian's message is not simply a new law that men have now; not a new philosphy, that has failed already! not merely a sense of guilt, there is no hope in that. What the world needs is a gospel of Hope. The story of the cross is such a gospel. The supreme theory of the Christian, then is to grasp the Divine conception of his mission, to get Christ's view of the ideal man. The Greek ideal man was an elegant thinker. The Roman, a great ruler, The Modern man, a king of commerce. Christ's ideal man is he who, identified with God, heroically commits his consecrated powers to the service of God's suffering poor.

The main thought of the test will come under three words.

Commission
Consecration
Connection

Commission, Thou hast sent me.

Consecration, Whenever an honest man accepts an office his next thought will be, "How can I best prepare for it?"

Connection, Christ consecrated Himself, He could do that, can you or I have that strength to take this heavy, dull load that is asked for us to carry, not without strength from on high.

Think of your mission, and your need to fulfill that mission.

"Consumer on the go"
Banking At Home? Protect Your Money With Travelers Checks
Be it ever so humble, sure there's no place like home. But, according to American Express, millions of dollars are lost each year by dwellers who habitually leave cash at home.
What can these cash hoarders do to protect their money? According to Consumer Affairs expert at American Express, Barbara Sullivan, "There's little risk in keeping a small amount of cash at home for emergencies. However, with a large sum of money it's better to deposit it in a financial institution or convert it into travelers checks. American Express Cheques, for example, never expire and, if they are lost at home or stolen, you can get them replaced."
What follows are five common reasons why people lose their money in their homes:
1. People hide money at home and, like "absent-minded" professors, forget where they put it.
2. The pockets of old discarded clothing or items sent to the cleaners often have cash that has been forgotten.
3. Pets and children delight in tearing up and even swallowing bills.
4. Fires destroy cash, like everything else.
5. Robbers who break into homes and apartments are experts at discovering "secret" hiding places.
